

UCSD Radiation Oncology South Bay Announces New Medical Director

June 1, 2010

Kevin T. Murphy, MD., announced as new Medical Director of UCSD Radiation Oncology South Bay.

UCSD Radiation Oncology South Bay, located in Chula Vista, CA, announced Tuesday that the role of Medical Director will be filled by Dr. Kevin Murphy. Dr. Murphy is an Associate Clinical Professor of Radiation Oncology at UC San Diego, where he has been a faculty member since 2005. In addition to his new role as Medical Director, Dr. Murphy serves as Chief of the Pediatric Oncology Service in the UCSD Department of Radiation Oncology, and Director of the UCSD Stereotactic Radiosurgery Program.

Dr. Murphy's extensive experience in delivering external beam radiation therapy will contribute to a seamless transition in patient care. Working closely with Teresa Langley, Director of Operations at UCSD Radiation Oncology South Bay, Murphy will continue utilizing leading-edge technologies to provide the best in cancer treatment. Langley and her entire staff are pleased to work with Dr. Murphy and look forward to the benefits this partnership will afford the South Bay region. Langley remarked, "UCSD Radiation Oncology South Bay's state of the art technology, paired with Dr. Murphy's expertise in radiation therapy, will provide our community with the best treatment options in the South Bay and San Diego areas."

Dr. Murphy earned a B.S. in Biological Sciences and Philosophy from the University of Notre Dame, and served as an engineering officer in the United States Navy following his graduation. After completing his military service, Murphy received his M.S. in Neurophysiology from Purdue University. Dr. Murphy graduated from the University of Chicago Pritzker School of Medicine and completed his residency at University of Chicago Hospitals.
